No Pitch Drainage

Pipes run flat. Pipe diameter and material are reduced by half and can be routed to a single civil connection. Less vertical drops, less penetrations, less material, less trenching, and less site disturbance. Just think of what you can do with all that extra space.

Siphonic storm drainage is based on the simple principle of a siphon with negative pressure caused by a difference in height of the building. The bigger the difference, the stronger the force and the faster the flow. No pitch or fancy pumps needed.

Pitch does not dictate design. You do.

Architect: ikon5

Engineer: OCI Associates, Inc.

Size: 177,000 sqft, $70 million

Inspired by the gracefulness of birds in flight, the student union building at Embry-Riddle Aeronautical University is an expression of its mission to teach the science, practice and business of aviation and aerospace. Located at the front door to the campus, the building's gently soaring form expressing flight creates an iconic identity for the University and embodies the student values of fearlessness, adventure and discovery.

Internally, the 177,000 square foot student union building is an aeronautical athenaeum combining social learning spaces, events, dining and the university library. A soaring, triple height commons anchors and integrates the collaborative social and learning interiors. Wrapping this space and open to it are lounges, dining venues, group study rooms, clubs and organizations, career services and the university library as well as an event center, creating a virtual "city within a city".

not only provides solar shading from the harsh Floridian sun but also invokes sinuous avian forms. The vertical, exposed struts convey a feather-like quality and are structural members that tie down the curved roof form from wind uplift, particularly, for hurricane resistance.

The great, exposed double arches that wrap the exterior support the vertical roof struts at the shading overhang and signify the main entrances to the building. Internally, an exposed 200-foot curving steel arch bisects the middle of the plan and supports a glass roof above, allowing the students of aviation the ability to look skyward while inside. The building's architecturally exposed structural steel (AESS) is an integral design element and helps create an exterior and interior aesthetic that feels finished and dynamic.
